

Day Trip: Wine Tasting and Hiking

The Santa Cruz Mountains wine region is nestled in one of the most unique natural environments in the world. With its mountainous terrain, marine and valley influences, varied micro-climates and diverse soils, the Santa Cruz Mountains offers vintners the ideal place to grow high quality grapes and was named by Wine Spectator as “the most underappreciated appellation in the world.” The Santa Cruz Mountains Appellation spans more than 850 square miles beginning from San Francisco down the Peninsula to Silicon Valley and Monterey Bay. Due to the size of the wine region it is often useful for visitors to plan trips by winery hours of operation, sub-regions or by urban winery locations. Plan a day trip to four distinct wineries close to San Jose with nearby hiking options.
